

Tulip Mania

The tulip paper will give you an oversight of the project,
its roadmap and vision.

Cardano

Though referred to as a ghostchain, Cardano has grown significantly since it was pioneered to the public in 2017. 2020 was marked by the Shelley upgrade, which enabled users to stake their ADA and led to Cardano Native Tokens and NFTs. We just witnessed the Alonzo hard fork in 2021 and the rise of smart contracts, DEXs and dApps. Now being in the Basho era, we are seeing optimization, improvements regarding the scalability and interoperability of the network and can't hide our anticipation for hydra.

Vita hominum flos est

Originally growing wild in the valleys of the Tian Shan Mountains, tulips were cultivated in Constantinople as early as 1055. While tulips had probably been cultivated in Persia from the tenth century, they did not come to the attention of the West until the sixteenth century, when Western diplomats to the Ottoman court observed and reported on them. They were rapidly introduced into Europe and became a frenzied commodity during the tulip mania.

Modern Times

NFTs are often accused of being a bubble like the Tulip Mania, but the key difference between the Tulip Mania and NFTs is the asset. NFTs aren't perishable, the assets will be around well into the future. Thus, as long as the collector doesn't sell it, the asset can grow back and beyond its price tag over time. That resiliency and ability to ride out market cycles are what makes NFTs different.

Modern Times

The Cardano tulip mania can do more!

We are now bringing tulip bulbs to Cardano in the form of 3D animated trading cards. They will be released in 21 different variations. Watch out for the Tulipa Semper Augustus, it looks especially rare.

The NFT is composed of several old fashioned posters, some containing important information about the trading card drop and the project itself, on a wooden wall. 200 NFTs with information on the main mint and the utility.

Those billboard NFTs will be your whitelist ticket for the trading cards. You'll be able to get a first oversight of all the different tulip bulbs and their rarity - and you'll read about the rarest tulip, the Tulipa Semper Augustus.

Trading Cards

The centerpiece of our trading cards is a hologram which depicts the tulips. The trading cards are a 3D render of old paper cards. You'll be able to tell the rarity on the first sight.

Trading Cards

21 different variations of 3D animated trading cards.

One of the tulips is a 1/1 NFT, the Tulipa Semper Augustus, which will give the holders a monthly share of the royalties of the project.

Semper Augustus

Semper Augustus

The Semper Augustus was the most rare and valuable of the high-end tulips during the Tulip Mania. It was an extraordinary flower with dark blood-red streaks and flashes on white petals. From a 1623 value of 1,000 guilders, a single bulb was reportedly sold for 5,500 guilders in 1633 and saw a 10,000 guilder asking price in February 1637, just before the bubble burst and prices cratered more than 90% to a fraction of 1623 prices.

Semper Augustus

Our Semper Augustus is different. It is as rare and maybe even more valueable as the original but it will also grant the holder of it a 40 % share of the royalties from secondary market sales.
